How do you ramp up your firm's expertise to incorporate new technologies into designs? Glen will describe his firm's experience in designing one of the most innovative educational buildings in the U.S. He will track the steps his firm took from agreeing to design the project to identifying and providing technical expertise to the successful delivery of the project that met the client's expectations for sustainable design. Both a cautionary tale about setting client expectations and using consultants and internal education to meet those expectations, the experience can help model conduct for firms that are on the cutting edge of sustainable design.

With more than 30 years of experience, Glen Birx has been involved in the design of a variety of technically complex building types. His responsibilities include programming, quality assurance, quality control, and technical review. He has led Ayers Saint Gross to a position of national prominence with the use of Building Information Modeling (BIM) and Integrated Project Delivery. The number of noteworthy projects he has worked on are too numerous to mention, but they are extensive.

Glen received his Bachelor of Architecture from the University of Maryland in 1980. He is a registered architect in 27 states and is a LEED accredited professional. He has published numerous articles and papers on BIM and its disruptive nature on professional practice, as well as other topics. He is also an active speaker around the country.
